Dear Young People...

As you embark on your life-journey, I urge you to prepare yourself for great adventure, precarious uncertainty, extraordinary success, and dismal failure. A bumpy road in life is both normal and healthy. Preparation for your journey is simple; believe in yourself, and be an honorable person, and no matter how many times you fall down, there will be other honorable people like yourself, there to pick you up and dust you off, so you can try again.

A lot of people will have expectations of what you should make of yourself, and it is really important that you do your best to follow the path leading toward your dream-career, for in the end, happiness is a far greater attainment than someone else’s idea of a good job.

And one last thing, when you see a person who has fallen, be there for them.

Best wishes,

Jack Horner

John "Jack" Horner
Regents Professor of Paleontology, Montana State University
Curator of Paleontology, Museum of the Rockies